

The Master of Education in Performing Arts is a dual-subject degree where students gain a teaching qualification in two school subjects. Usually, applicants must hold a Bachelor degree qualifying them to teach (Bachelor mit Lehramtsoption) and will continue to study the combination of subjects they chose for their Bachelor degree at Master's level. However, at Master's level the major subject studied at Bachelor level becomes the minor subject, and vice versa. At Master's level, students intensify their study of their specialist subject as well as expanding their knowledge of teaching methodologies and content, with a focus on Contemporary Theatre and Theatre Pedagogy. As part of their degree, students also undertake a work placement in a school where they will gain essential teaching practice, while the modules in Education Sciences at the Technische Universität Braunschweig will provide students with additional teaching skills. Your chosen second subject will also be taught at the Technische Universität Braunschweig.

And afterwards?

Graduates of the Master of Education in Performing Arts are qualified to teach in schools up to Year 13. The Master's degree is recognised as the equivalent of the German First State Examination in teaching. It allows the holder to continue to the practical stage of teacher training that is the prerequisite for obtaining full certification as a state-recognised school.

As Performing Arts is increasingly offered as a school subject, graduates of the Master's degree can look forward to excellent career opportunities, and the degree also opens up the path to doctoral study.

For those who wish to continue on to the practical stage of teacher training, please note that this stage can be completed in any Federal State in Germany subject to approval by the state in question. Questions relating to this and about teaching as a career in Germany should be directed to the Ministry for Culture in the state where you wish to complete your practical training.
